The familiar automobile engines, the "pelt-pelt" of the snowblower, and the "whirr-whirr" of the snowmobiles all combined to bring a feeling of weariness to many of the residents of Dickinson County. And for a few days, the "sniffling" of the snowstorm would continue, reminding us of the harsh winter weather that has been so prevalent this year.

Many children had turned to the day-to-day battles of the storm. Many others turned to the day-to-day battles with the "storm:" their homes. Some children were able to find shelter in the "storm," but many others were not. The "storm" was a powerful force, one that many people found difficult to overcome.

However, the "storm" had not been without its benefits. The "storm" brought much-needed snowfall to the region, providing much-needed relief from the dry, hot summer months. And for many, the "storm" became a source of joy, as they were able to enjoy the beauty of the snow and the "storm."
